Our Mission:
Our mission is to advance scholarship at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, develop interagency leaders, improve interagency operations, and build a body of interagency knowledge.

Message from the CGSC Foundation CEO
This year, the Simons Center welcomed Col. (Ret.) Roderick M. Cox as the new Program Director. Rod joined the staff in March after a distinguished career serving in the military and in interagency positions. While Rod has not been with us long, he is already leaving his mark.

As I predicted in last year’s letter, the Simons Center has continued to move forward, accomplishing much in a short amount of time. The Simons Center has increased its commitment to supporting the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College by not only maintaining the high quality of its InterAgency Journal whose authors include CGSC faculty and students, but also establishing a new lecture series. The InterAgency Brown-Bag Lecture Series is co-sponsored with the U.S. Army Command and General Staff School, and is proving to be a wonderful addition to the College’s extracurricular offerings. So far the new lecture series has featured several experts in their field, and more are lining up for their turn to engage with the students.

Already, I can see that 2017 will be as busy and productive as 2016. I’d like to encourage you to contribute to the Simons Center’s mission whether through the submission of original manuscripts for our publication series or through financial donations. With your continued support, the Simons Center will carry on making an impact.

– Douglas L. Tystad
Chief Executive Officer, CGSC Foundation, Inc.

Message from the Simons Center Program Director
Our world is complex and the challenges we face call for more often than not a “whole-of-government” approach. We need leaders who are educated and trained to successfully function in the interagency environment. And while most government agencies tend to focus on their own mission and develop plans of action using their own resources, this is simply not adequate and does not advance the interests of the United States. Competent interagency leadership is needed for synergy to occur across all agencies of our government. The American people deserve no less.

The Simons Center’s mission is to develop interagency leaders, improve interagency processes, and to build a body of interagency knowledge. We are doing this by enhancing the scholarship at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College through several programs which include bringing in extracurricular speakers who are interagency experts, sponsoring senior interagency officials who enhance elective courses, sponsoring academic writing contests, and by publishing faculty and student manuscripts that add to the professional interagency discourse. Similarly, the Simons Center also conducts programs that enhance the scholarship and interaction by the Staff College faculty and students and senior government officials with area universities. These programs showcase the talent and the wealth of knowledge within the government while at the same time enhance interaction and professional development with learned civilian academicians and their students. All with the intent to develop leaders who can successfully function across and with multiple agencies and non-governmental entities.

The Simons Center is a commercial publishing house. We publish several items to include the well-respected, peer-reviewed InterAgency Journal - a refereed national security studies journal that provides a forum for professional discussion on interagency topics. Our readership is world-wide, both in hard copy and online and we welcome the submission of manuscripts that add to the professional discourse.

And the Simons Center’s website serves as a one-stop site for interagency practitioners, scholars, and policy makers. We offer “News You Can Use” – a tri-weekly round-up of news concerning various government and non-government topics relevant to our audience – as well as other current news and events from across the interagency community. We also offer a comprehensive user friendly interagency bibliography and we have a library of over 170 original interagency papers, studies, and reports.

I invite you to partner with us as we strive to develop interagency leaders.

Simons Center Fellow

In 2016, the Simons Center welcomed Lt. Col. Todd Schmidt, U.S. Army, as a Military Research Fellow. Lt. Col. Schmidt is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Kansas in a program through the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College’s School of Advanced Military Studies. His research focuses on interagency process and outcomes, primarily investigating the influence of belief systems and “operational code” on National Security Council participants, recommendations to the President, and how the make-up of the National Security Council can affect and generate cognitive inconsistencies in the interagency process, policy recommendations and outcomes. The Simons Center looks forward to assisting him with his scholarship and to publishing his research findings.

Did you know?

The InterAgency Journal is used by the U.S. State Department’s Foreign Service Institute.
The Simons Center established a new lecture series in partnership with the U.S. Army Command and General Staff School. The InterAgency Brown-Bag Lecture Series is an extracurricular, interagency topic-focused series that is intended to help enrich the CGSS curriculum.

Each lecture features speakers from U.S. government agencies who share both their agency’s and their personal experience and expertise with the students and faculty at the Command and General Staff College. The lectures have garnered positive reviews from attendees and presenters alike.

Presentations are recorded for use by the 6,000+ Distance Education CGSC students and the resident CGSS at the four satellite campuses. Presentations are also available for viewing at the Simons Center website.

Since they began in September, the lectures have averaged over 40 attendees, including CGSC students and faculty, area college and university students, military family members, and Department of Defense and other U.S. agency personnel from the Fort Leavenworth and Kansas City metropolitan area. All presentations are free and open to the public.
